LATINOS S

IN HERITAGE CONSERVATION

Founded in 2014, Latinos in Heritage Conservation (LHC) is a national organization of professionals, educators, and advocates dedicated to promoting historic preservation in Latino communities throughout the United States. LHC was formed in efforts to elevate Latino historic places and stories as part of a more inclusive American narrative and to sustain the living cultural heritage of the country's diverse Latino communities.

This program will introduce attendees to LHC's initiatives and programs, and will include a presentation showcasing a selection of heritage resources for which the organization advocates.

Our speaker is Sara Delgadillo Cruz. Sara is on the Executive Committee of LHC. She began her involvement while earning her Masters in Heritage Conservation from USC. Sara participated in the Latino Heritage Internship Program as cultural resources intern with the National Park Service. She is currently a preservation planner with the City of Los Angeles Office of Historic Resources where she assists in the administration of municipal preservation programs and serves as the data coordinator for HistoricPlacesLA, Los Angeles' historic resource inventory.
